Apart from some very faint discolouration on the fore-edge of the preliminary pages, a very well preserved copy of the rare first edition. NOTE: The foundation book for the Australian Wine Industry. The significance of this book is two-fold. It is both the first book on Australian wine and the first book on viticulture to be published in Australia. James Busby was the single most important figure in the early development of the Australian wine industry. As a young man he had studied viticulture in France. After his studies he accompanied his parents when they migrated to New South

Wales in 1824. Soon after arrival, he received a grant of some 2000 acres in the Hunter River district where he put into practice his new-found knowledge. His treatise published a year later, here offered, acted as an instruction manual for all other Colonial wine makers. James Busby's property, named Kirkton, was taken over by Lindemans in 1914 and is the oldest continuous producing vineyard in Australia. Ferguson 1004
