- 192 (EUREKA STOCKADE.) Report from the Select Committee upon Mr. J.F.V. Fitzgerald's Case; ... Melbourne: John Ferres, Government Printer 1867. Folio. Sewn as issued. (VIII,34pp.). Originally known as J.L.F.V. Foster he became known as J.F.V. Fitzgerald upon the death of his uncle Lord Fitzgerald in 1860. Foster was Colonial Secretary of Victoria in 1853 and served very closely under Lieut. Governor La-Trobe. He was the acting administrator of the Colony until Governor Hotham arrived in mid 1854. Due to Foster's executive position during a time of financial difficulty, with the gap between expenditure and revenue rapidly growing because of an extravagant public works program, he became the target of much public criticism. When Hotham took over the leadership of the Colony, he did so with great self-assurance taking very little advice from Foster. Governor Hotham was determined to enforce the miner licence's as the major source of revenue, in order to prop up the states dwindling coffers. This was against the advice of Foster, who had advised to abolish the miners licence system and replace it with a tax on the export of gold. Hotham insisted on enforcing the miner license's and thus creating an ever-growing group of defiant resistance. The Eureka uprising was the result of this and many other similar actions and decisions by the authorities of the day. Under great pressure from Governor Hotham, Foster resigned amidst promises from the Governor of compensation for loss of salary. He became the official scapegoat for the government's actions in relation to the uprising. Foster fought many battles to vindicate himself, he failed to ever clear his name and he never received his promised compensation. These proceedings and minutes of evidence investigate the circumstances under which Mr. J.F.V. Fitzgerald (John Foster) resigned his office of Colonial Secretary in November 1855. $450
